SNAPSHOTS OF A GOOD LIFE

The Felicitation of Prof. Kaikhosrov D. Irani

Pomona Darbe Mehr, November 20, 2004

There are few people in this world who invoke as much admiration, respect, and apparently, volunteerism, as Prof. Irani and his wife, Piroja. About a 150 people – Zarathusti and non-Zarathusti, from the New York area and from far away – were already there when we arrived. “What is all this? I never expected so many people...” Kaikhosrov said as my husband and I greeted him, shaking his head gently.

The official program for the evening began with a benediction by Ervads Pervez Patel, Darius Antia, Kersi Antia, and Rohinton Madon and Ervad Kersi Antia translated it. Kaikhosrov himself had selected this gathic verse as a benediction at many other occasions in the past. This was followed by two brief lectures by former students of Prof. Irani and other brief reflections by a variety of people from all walks of Kaikhosrov’s life. In short, it was an evening full of reminiscences, good wishes and gratitude. It was an illuminating celebration, which provided insight into the life of a most noble couple and the impact of their good deeds on others. An album of sorts filled with snapshots of a good life lived by a couple most loved.

Slated to speak regarding Philosophy Now, and What K.D. Irani Taught Me Then, Dr. Kenneth Stern noted that Kaikhosrov had “civilized” him in various ways, including, instilling in him a taste for Indian food (further enhanced by Piroja’s excellent cooking) and an appreciation for the opera. Dr. Stern recalled how Kaikhosrov inspired him to major in philosophy and mentored him spiritually and academically. Now a Professor Emeritus at the State University of New York, Dr. Stern recalled Kaikhosrov’s advice to him when he first started teaching: “Remember, you’re not teaching a course, you’re teaching students.” Kaikhosrov had said. Speaking about the discipline of Philosophy itself, Dr. Stern provided the audience with a peek into the professional life of Prof. Irani.

Dr. Oscar Muscarella, a former student of Kaikhosrov and presently, an archeologist at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, gave a talk entitled, An Archaeologist’s Involvement with Zoroastrianism. Dr. Muscarella came to learn of Zoroastrianism because of his curiosity about his favorite professor at the City College. Kaikhosrov was the first Zoroastrian Dr. Muscarella had ever met and after describing his work with Zoroastrian artifacts, Dr. Muscarella mused that he had never expected when he first met Kaikhosrov, that his career would involve him with Zoroastrian culture as much as it had.

The impact of Kaikhosrov’s life on his former students is undeniable. Dr. Martin Tamny a former student and later a colleague of Kaikhosrov described how in 1997, he came across a former student of Kaikhosrov who made large yearly donations to City College. After Dr. Tamny arranged a lunch meeting for the student and Kaikhosrov, the student was so pleased to have reacquainted himself with his favorite professor that he donated $2 million in stock to the City College Fund to sponsor the “Prof. K.D. Irani Visiting Professorship in Philosophy at the City College”. Dr. Tamny described the donation as “a testament to the high regard that Prof. Irani was held in by his students.” Having known him for 42 years, Dr. Tamny stated, “Along the way he has taught me through his own actions the importance of good thoughts, good words, and most of all good deeds.”

Prof. Irani’s Zoroastrian scholarship was also honored. Dr. Ferhang Mehr stated that, in his opinion, “nobody as much as Professor Irani has discerned the true meaning of the philosophy of Zarathustra.” Dr. Ali Jaffrey, with whom Kaikhosrov and Piroja, among others, founded the Zarathustrian Assembly, stated that the Assembly owed its success to the couple. Dr. Lovji Cama, ZAGNY’s Dean of Religious Studies, spoke of the concrete contributions Piroja and Kaikhosrov had made to ZAGNY over the years, in arranging religious seminars and religion classes and serving the community as board members. In particular, Dr. Cama spoke of the impact of Kaikhosrov’s lectures at ZAGNY youth camps, stating that “his wit, his sense of humor, and his ability to tailor his discourse to the level of his audience, made him an engaging speaker and a great teacher for the youth.”

Providing a different perspective on Prof. Irani, Dr. Jacob Stern, a colleague observed, “There is only a thin line which separates Prof. Irani from Don Quixote. Both men have carefully trimmed chin beards, both wear slightly bizarre clothes (though I admit I’ve never seen K.D. in armor), but most importantly, both men set out to act as just men should act in a world who’s most outstanding characteristic is its injustice. Don Quixote does not exactly understand this fact about the world and, therefore, we think him mad. K.D., on the other hand, understands well that the world in which he attempts to act justly is itself an unjust place. Yet, he seems to me, constantly astonished at that knowledge. This, I think, accounts for what seems to me a most notable feature of his personality: that he is totally without cynicism and without any mocking sarcasm. Among the Hasidic Jews there is a traditional belief that in this world there are at any moment in history thirty-six just men. It is because of these thirty-six just men and the web of their ongoing goodness,

If you would like to announce an event that will occur within the next 3 months in the ZAGNY newsletter, or provide feedback or suggestions about this newsletter, please email zagny_secretary@lycos.com.

that God has not annihilated the world. The thirty-six are, in a quite literal sense, the salvation of us all. I should I suppose confess to a long held suspicion that K.D. Irani might be one of these thirty-six."

Describing Prof. Irani as "the very soul of the City College," Dr. Stern stated that "thousands of his students and colleagues - both past and present - will attest to the depth of his knowledge, his intellectual honesty, his wisdom, and most importantly, to the profound influence he has had on their lives.... If ever there was a man who's good thoughts and deeds give us hope for the world's renewal that man is KD Irani."

Another colleague, Dr. Frank Grande, described how a reference letter from Albert Einstein helped Prof. Irani to get his first job at the City College.

Providing insight into his personal life, Zarin Weil, the Irani's niece began her remarks by stating, "I cannot say a few words about Kaikhosrov without also talking about Piroja. She is his biggest fan and foremost champion. Each is a pillar of strength to the other. They are the sort of devoted partners we all hope for and hope to be." Speaking of her impressions as a four year old, which was when she had first met him, Mrs. Weil stated, "I remember being charmed by the bright-eyed man with the pointy beard who seemed to have an endless supply of stories to tell and a sweet lady who took such delight in every joke her husband told. That was a long time ago. But what struck me about them then, remains true even now." Describing their more recent family reunions, Mrs. Weil told of a charming essay written by her ten year old daughter in which she nominated Kaikhosrov for the "relative of the year award".

Other persons from the community who spoke in honor of the Iranis included, former FEZANA President, Framroze Patel, who spoke with great gratitude to the Iranis for bringing him back to his religion after a period of disillusionment with it in his younger years; Daraius Antia, who like Dr.Cama thanked Kaikhosrov for enlightening him through the adult religion classes; Arnavaz Patel, who informed the audience that "if you do a google search on his name you will find exactly 5,162 results" for your search and thanked Kaikhosrov and Piroja for being "like grandparents" to ZAGNY's youth; Sheriar Sheriari who spoke of his experience of making the documentary Domains of Belief as an amazing and exciting intellectual adventure; Aysha Ghadiali, who read messages from all over the world communicated through the Creating Awareness Network and presented the Iranis with a compilation of such messages; Kersi Antia who thanked the Iranis for standing by him in challenging times; and Rustom Kevala, who spoke of his experiences with the Iranis in the course of his work compiling Prof. Irani's papers for publications.

On behalf of a grateful community, Zareen Austin and Shiraz Unvala presented garlands made by Sheroo Kanga, to Kaikhosrov and Piroja Irani. ZAGNY past President, Erach Munshi, presented Prof. Irani with a framed maan patra.

With humility and gratitude, Kaikhosrov Irani thanked the audience for their presentation. With characteristic wit and humility, he said, "Thank you...I really thank you. And I really appreciate this. You must realize that this is a slightly embarrassing situation for me. I have been praised beyond my conception. And this was an occasion where critical comments would be filtered out, but these are the kinds of things that happen at memorial meetings. Fortunately, I'm alive and I have the opportunity to hear them and I do appreciate that. And you must realize that if I were dead, I couldn't have been requested to speak. But now, I shall speak, because I rather like that."

To an eager audience, Kaikhosrov spoke of his career in philosophy and in Zoroastrian studies. Of the latter he concluded, "Religion without vision is blind. Religion without a way of life is empty. But there are people who think that if we perform these rituals and those rituals and so on and join in them then that is religion. That is certainly something one should do, because that's part of the social structure of religious life, but if you think that that is religion you are missing something."

After a few more remarks, Prof. Irani left the stage to resounding applause and a standing ovation. As dinner was served, messages of good will and gratitude continued to be read. As the event winded down, a reluctant group said their fond farewells to the honored couple, taking with them these snapshots of a life well lived and, probably, "much hope for the world's renewal" as well.

Shazneen Rabadi Gandhi lives in New York City. She writes as a hobby.

Postscript: ZAGNY would like to thank many volunteers who made this event a grand success, specifically Yasmin Ghadiali, Mehru and Lovji Cama, and Framroze Patel for their dedicated hard work in preparation for this event and their contributions in kind, and to Sheroo Kanga for making the garlands for the Irani couple.

■ CONSUL GENERAL OF INDIA (NY) ADDRESSES WZCC MEETING IN NEW YORK

At the invitation of the New York Chapter of the WZCC, on November 14, 2004, Mr. Pramathesh Rath, the Consul General of India in New York, discussed several issues of some importance to the Zarathusti community in the United States. Mr. Rath acknowledging that it would have been impossible for him to pass up a rare opportunity to speak to the Zoroastrian community in New York.

Speaking in laudatory terms of the accomplishments of Indians living in the US, Mr. Rath observed that the ideal way for ex-pats to contribute to India would be to bring their expertise rather than their capital to India to assist in building the country's infrastructure. He noted that the experiences of Indians in the US had given the new liberal India renewed confidence in its ability to compete with the west in the new era of globalization.

Many were interested in the new rules governing persons of Indian origin. While Mr. Rath did not have all the details regarding this subject, he directed people to www.indiaday.com for more information. Mr. Rath also responded to questions regarding outsourcing jobs to India. Acknowledging that it was an emotional issue for Americans who saw a link between their own job losses after the Internet bubble burst and the outsourcing trend, Mr. Rath suggested that the economic benefits of outsourcing and Indo-American relations make outsourcing inevitable. Asked by an audience member how he would advise a person deciding whether to do business in China or India, he identified differences in the business models of China which is based on foreign direct investment and India which is based on championing select industries that are growing in the country as a basic factor to be considered. He also noted that China's more flexible labor policies may weigh in its favor, while the similarities in corporate governance between Indian and American corporations may suggest that India is the better choice. Ultimately, he concluded both China and India will be leading producers of goods and services in the world and a person deciding between the two countries should weigh these various factors in light of the type of business he wished to commence in either country. Refreshments were provided at the end of the discussion by ZAGNY member, Sheroo Kanga. This meeting of the WZCC was filmed by TV Asia. A big thank you to past president of FEZANA, Mr. Framroze Patel, a very modest and unassuming person, who was instrumental in organizing this meeting.
